Feeling stuffy? Open window to improve ventilation. CO2 is above 800 ppm for 15 minutes.

What affects your air

The air we breathe indoors can be up to five times worse than outdoors.

Ordinary things found in our homes or workplaces such as wooden furniture, cleaning products, or carpets, all contribute to the air we breathe.

Unvented cooking, harmful appliances, your car idle in the garage, and even the number of people inside a room greatly affect the quality of our indoor air.

Take control

We can only manage what we can measure.

Knowing the quality of the air you're breathing helps you make better decisions about how you live, work, learn and play. This knowledge helps you develop better and healthier habits. Avoid asthma or allergies triggered by unhealthy indoor air. Know when to start cleaning or if it's time to get professional help.
